

Getting to Know Your Faculty in Residence

The Faculty in Residence (FIR) program provides UNCG faculty members and visiting scholars an opportunity to work closely with UNCG's students and staff to create an academically enriched environment within the UNCG residence halls and learning community programs.

Drawing on their particular areas of interest and expertise, FIRs participate in and facilitate academic based programmatic opportunities for students living in UNCG residence halls and learning communities, thus fostering intentional and intellectually enriching out of the classroom interactions among students and faculty.

In addition, FIRs serve as an academic role model and mentor for students living in the residence hall and/or learning communities to which they are assigned, thereby creating an environment that supports intellectual growth, inquiry and lifelong learning both in and out of the classroom environment. Faculty in Residence serve as mentors and educators.
